

What Is Globalization?

Globalization is defined as the process of international integration coming from the spread of world culture, ideologies, products, and other aspects of culture. It is a theory that is shaping the modern world. Things such as political and social ideologies are being shared and support for a world economy is being formed. There is large concentration on interdependency between nations. The world as a whole is trying to work together to make the world a better place.